University of Michigan, Henry Ford College and Wayne County Community College District team up for better teaching & learning in biomedical science

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — There's a two different ends of the higher education journey: some just starting out on associate's degrees, the others finishing up advanced training after earning a doctorate in biomedical science.

Through a new five-year federal grant totaling $3.93 million from the National Institutes of Health (NIH), the two types of "learners" and some faculty members at Southeast Michigan's colleges

Both Henry Ford College and the Wayne County Community College District have signed on to allow University of Michigan School and College of Engineering graduate students to work in their laboratories, working alongside their faculty

The project, which specializes in the fields of physiology and biomedical engineering, will hone their teaching skills with the help of HFC and WCCCD faculty members over the course of four years. By observing and teaching a course together, the graduate students can prepare to teach and mentor students when

TIP of the WEEK

The United States Computer Emergency Readiness Team offers these security tips to avoid being a victim of a social engineering or phishing attack:

- Do not reveal personal or financial information in email, and do not respond to email solicitations for this information. This includes following links sent in email.
- Pay attention to the URL of a website. Malicious websites may look identical to a legitimate site, but the URL may use a variation in spelling or a different domain (e.g., .com vs. .net).
- Install and maintain anti-virus software, firewalls, and email filters.
